The trouble of getting a western frontier man to sit on a jury to try Indians, is very great, owing to their having expressed an opinion. An Omaha Alderman was asked if he had any prejudice, when he replied: "No, only I've been chased by 'em, been in several battles with 'em, and would hang every devil of 'em at sight."

The fearful gale which swept over the lakes on Tuesday night and Wednesday of last week was the heaviest since the memorable storm of 1844. The coast of the whole chain of lakes is wreck strewn. The Buffalo Express says the lesson of this terrible storm is, most emphatically, that iron is the proper material for the construction of lake craft. Staunch wooden vessels, built of the toughest oak, went to pieces upon reefs which would have merely indented, or at least broken a compartment of the iron propellers. The Express says of the numerous smaller crafts which were wrecked, there was scarcely one which would not have had a fair chance of surviving the gale had it been properly built of iron with water tight compartments. In the British islands iron has almost entirely superseded wood as ship building material. If iron vessels are the best for open sea, the late storm has emphasized the fact that they are still more so for the swarming inland commerce of the lakes.

One ship, thirteen barges and three brigs are now loading.

The latest intelligence from the Red River insurrection says the leaders of the rebellion have taken possession of the stores of the Hudson Bay Company from which daily rations are issued. Dr. Brows, publisher of the Norwester and Pioneer at Wennepeg, has been arrested for refusing to print a proclamation for the insurgents, and the printers were forced by an armed guard to put the proclamation to press, and it has been posted in various parts of the settlement. Passes are required from all and the mails are not allowed to leave without close scrutiny. Meantime, McDougall remains in his quarters in Dakota. A house in St. Paul, largely connected with the Red river trade, has private advices that there is an organization of Scotch, including a considerable body of half breeds in communication with McDougall, prepared to take advantage of any reaction in his behalf. Fort Garry and the whole country is in the possession of the rebels. The object is not to throw off allegiance to the queen, but to oppose annexation to Canada.

Prison reformers would do well to remember that the criminal classes are addicted to the use of tobacco more generally than others. Concurrent testimony of superintendents of prisons, houses of refuge and reform, shows that tobacco is the modern solace in confinement, as it is the exhilarant in freedom, and the cutting off of a supply of the weed, makes patients and prisoners nervous, restless and discontented. The use of tobacco was prohibited for a month at the Boy's Refuge at Rochester, New York, recently, and it was found that insubordination became general, and escapes frequent while the efforts made to secure tobacco clandestinely were such as would ensure success in life, if displayed in business pursuits.

TRAGEDY IN THE TRIBUNE OFFICE.

Mr. Albert D. Richardson Shot by Daniel McFarland.

A few minutes after 5 o'clock Thursday evening last, Albert D. Richardson, the well known newspaper correspondent, was shot by Daniel McFarland. This is the second time that Mr. Richardson has been wounded by the same person. The first assault occurred one night in Amity street, in the spring of 1867, as he was escorting to her home Mrs. McFarland, then an actress at the Winter Garden Theatre, after her duties on the stage. The second attack, as above referred to, took place last night in the publication office of the TRIBUNE. In the interim between these events, Mrs. McFarland had taken measures for a divorce from her husband, and had recently obtained it, at the hands of some Indiana Court. While his wife had been about this business Mr. McFarland had been nursing his wrath against the supposed author of his domestic unhappiness, and meeting him Thursday night, deliberately attempted to take his life. The first wound was a mere flesh stroke in the thigh, of which Richardson soon recovered. The last is a more serious matter, the ball entering the stomach, and inflicting injuries which are likely to end fatally. As Richardson grimly remarked, "Mack has evidently improved as a marksman."

The Simple Facts in the Vanderbilt-Erie War.

From the N. Y. Evening Commonwealth. The public have often been obliged to disapprove of certain doings of "the Erie people," as Messrs. Fisk and Gould are popularly called. There is one movement, however, that these gentlemen are making, in which they will have the best wishes of the majority of the public. Commodore Vanderbilt last year tried to get possession of the Erie Railroad, as he had already done of the Hudson River and the New York Central. Had he succeeded, he would have become the monopolist of every avenue from the West to this part. All traffic would have to pay toll to him, and that healthful competition which is so essential to the public good would have been at an end. Mr. Vanderbilt, conscious of his financial strength, set to work to buy up all the stock that he could get, and spent several millions of dollars in this effort. The Erie Company, claiming that they had legal power, issued a large amount of new stock. The Commodore, finding that his purse was not long enough to buy the new stock as well as the old, gave up the attempt, and several suits were at once brought against the Erie Company, and the disgraceful scandals of this litigation are fresh in the memories of our readers. It is remarkable, however, that although Commodore Vanderbilt's name was not seen in any of these suits, still the Company paid four millions of dollars to him, and the suits were all compromised or withdrawn.

Now all of this was done by the old Board of Directors of the Erie road. The present board repudiated this bargain, and bringing a suit to recover the Company's money. The Commodore was in court on Saturday, and his examination amounts substantially to this: That he sold at $0, 50,000 shares of the Erie stock he bought last year; that the stock was sold to Daniel Drew, and not to the Erie Railroad Company, and that he engaged to sell 50,000 shares more at the same price, if required to do so, within twelve months; that in consideration of these stipulations he received 3,500,000 in cash, and $500,000 worth of bonds of the Boston, Hartford and Erie Company. The whole case turns on two points: first, whether the transaction is one which the Erie Board were legally competent to perform, and secondly, whether if competent, the Erie Company did actually complete the negotiation, or whether it was done by Daniel Drew in the personal individual character. This case is not to be tried before a jury, the motion for that purpose having been refused last week.
